FREE COINAGE BY THE UNITED STATES ALONE.

During the years 1887, '88 and '89. the total coinage of silver outside of the United States, according to figurs of the Director of the Mint, was $327,901,031, an average of more than $109,000,000 a year. This, of ourse, includes some recoinages. For 1888 the reported recoinage amounted to about 131 million dollars. Es timating the recoinages at $20,000,- your surplus whe t, for which we will 000 annually, it would leave about ay you the highest market price $90,000,000 a year new silver taken into the coinage of foreign countries. During those same years the total product was $429,615,000 an average of about $143,000,000, leaving not much in excess of $53,000,000 to be annually absorbed by the United States. Making every reasonable allowance for erroneous calculations, Hence it is preposterous to assume that free coinage will throw the whole burden upon us. The idea seems to prevail that just as soon as we open our mints every nation will stop using silver. It is a ten with a patriot's blood and dried in known farmer named James Hughes, enough of either of the metals to do try were intended to enable us to util. great deal more reasonable to believe that its use will largely increase. > FREE COINAGE BY THE UNITED STATE ALONE.

During the years 1887, '88 and '89 he total coinage of silver outside of the United States, according to figure of the Director of the Mint, was $327,901,031, an average of more than $109,000,000 a year. This, of ourse, includes some recoinages. For 1888 the reported recoinage amounted to about 131 million dollars. Es timating the recoinages at $20,000,-000 annually, it would leave about ay you the highest market price $90,000,000 a year new silver taken into the coinage of foreign countries. During these same years the total product was $429,615,000 an average of about $143,000,000, leaving not much in excess of $53,000,000 to be product is taken by other countries. burden upon us.

The idea seems to prevail that just as soon as we open our mints every nation will stop using silver. It is a great deal more reasonable to believe that its use will largely increase. The great argument against silver is and has been its depreciation. If we stand will certainly be worth that price. It will not be necessary for us to actually take all of the silver in order to sustain the price.

ABOUT BOGUS BUTTER.

argarine Ilas Not Been a Means Much of the public toleration omargarine arises from the belief that it is a means of cheapening the cost of living, and, therefore, afford to the poorer classes an opportunity for economy. There are two objections to the validity of this argument. In the first place, I believe it to be a mat-ter of demonstration that no substantial gain in the way of opportunity to poor of the civilized community can be secured by cheapening the cost of living. This, however, is a question of abstract political economy, and need not be entered into further. Indeed, we may concede that if fatty food was cheapened by the sale of oleomargarine a benefit would result. The real objection, however, to the above argument is that oleomargarine almost never reaches the consumer under circumstances in which its

Thousands of samples have been brought into my laboratory by the agents of parties prosecuting under the act of 1885, and in all cases in which purchases were made at retail which purchases were made at retail butter prices were paid. Oleomarga-rine has never afforded any real relief in the question of living. No "plea more specious and corrupt" has ever been alleged concerning any food article. A Few Landmarks That Still Linger in the Creole City.

The Passing Away of the Creele Negro and the Trades Monopolised by Him - The Plarine Seller and Pole

[Special New Orleans (La.) Letter.] What is known as the "Creole negro" is gradually disappearing from the picturesque "French quarter," not so much from the advance of enterprise, but from the advance of time—old age.
Nothing advances in the French quarstalls, or in front of the market, all day, Nothing advances in the French quar-ter excepting the price of board and room rent during Mardi Gras and other holiday festivals. The "Creole darky" is a descendant of the West Indian negro, repudiates the African around are noise, confusion and shouts of "Come, buy some nice fish!" "Sweeta banana, all ripe!" and "Oranges, ten cents a dozen!" But they have a corner on the market, and know that this queer stuff is in demand.

A small remnant of the once nower. English nor French, and is mostly shrugs and intonations of the voice.

All persons having claims against "Creole darkies" compete with them in the estate of A. A. Crider, deceased, running lodging houses. At every sec-water-tight baskets of various designs able. The furniture is of French design, heavy bedsteads, almost immovable chairs, many very unsteady, and large round, heavy center tables, all carved after the styles in vogue before the reign of terror, or during the first mpire. One would think almost that these melancholy descendants of the emigres were as old as the furniture in

Instead of the pure article, and those white, light, digestible crullers we used to get for a "picayune" (five cents-or, more exact, six and one-fourth cents), we now get a weak dilution as black as soot and as bitter as an acorn, with greasy doughnuts, good only for paving stones. Only a few of the old-time darkies are found, and they mainly sell plarines—cakes made of pure white sugar, chocoselling sugar cakes. If the sun shines down rather warmly, the old dames raise their umbrellas and sit, walting for customers, humming an olden time Indian negro, repudiates the African negro alliance, and claims to be a "Frenchman." The plarine is a Creeke confection.

The plarine is a Creole confection, and it seems that they alone know how to make it, so pretty with vari-colored hocolate, and so too 'isome. The Creoles continue the old custom of marketing. The madame of the household comes with a house servant, or perhaps a negro boy, to carry the basket. Another feature that is not quite extinct is the Choctaw Indian women who sell gumbo filie—that favored dish of the French. But these Indians are not as picturesque as those of a generation ago. ABOUT BOGUS BUTTER.

Oleomargarine Has Not Been a Means of Much of the public toleration of oleomargarine arises from the belief that it is a means of cheapening th cost of living, and, therefore, afford to the poorer classes an opportunity for economy. There are two objection the first place, I believe it to be a matter of demonstration that no substantial gain in the way of opportunity to poor of the civilized commands can be secured by cheapening the cost of livabstract political economy, and need not be entered into further. Indeed. we may concede that if fatty food was cheapened by the sale of oleo margarine a benefit would result The real objection, however, to the above argument is that oleomarga rine almost never reaches the con sumer under circumstances in which it economical production can be made available. I mean by this that it never is cheap except to those who are the mere purveyors of it. No poor man or woman ever gets the benefit of the cheapness of oleomargarine. It brings butter prices at all points at which it meets the consumer. Thousands of samples have been ought into my laboratory by the agents of parties prosecuting under the act of 1885, and in all cases in which purchases were made at retail butter prices were paid. Oleomarga-rine has never afforded any real relief in the question of living. No "plea more specious and corrupt" has eve been alleged concerning any food ar-ticle. It could never secure a market upon its merits. It has never found a field in any amount except when the ultimate intention of deceiving the user and increasing the profit of the seller has been part of the influence. The so-called demand of the command is created by large users of butand wear civilized clothing. They sit ter who do not have to cat the materias silent as statues, with their baskets al they furnish. For instance, restaurant keepers, hotel proprietors, managers of public institutions; well-to-do merchants, lawyers, doctors, etc., do prefer butter, and they never use the

In fact, it is not likely that a substi tute fat can ever be found except b processes of deception. The public buy a material of artificial origin and shapes, and ornament them with laws persons who buy oleomargarine at sixteen cents per pound will sell it for butter prices, tempted by the profit

Everyone admits that if the function of the government is to protect the unwary it is proper to legislate regarding the sale of oleomargarine as butter. Two methods are open for this purpose; one is to prohibit under all conditions the sale of the article; the other is to regulate the business so that no sale shall take place unless the buyer is notified of the nature of the article. It appears, however, that all the package have failed to accomplis! the purpose, and it seems to me, to secure the protection of the comp hall be passed, to compel the article to be put up in such forms that it can color by the use of some material, the Lv.
